Lankhmar - Temple district

One gets the impression that since the beginning of time an unending horde of their priests and apostles (or even the gods themselves, it makes little difference) have been crippling across [the Great Eastern] desert, the Sinking Land, and the Great Salt Marsh to converge on Lankhmar's low, heavy-arched Marsh Gate...

Lankhmar - Cash district

394 metres (1200 feet)

Some of the wealthiest people in Lankhmar live and work in the Cash District. Bankers, moneylenders, and moneychangers share the streets with fences, loan sharks and pawnshops. This is the district of shady deals and operators as well as high finance and wealthy patrons

Lankhmar - Tenderloin district

Clearly in view across Cheap Street was a wide, low, open doorway, framed by grimy stone blocks. There led up to it two steps hollowed by the treadings of centuries. Orange-yellow light spilled out from bracketed torches inside. They couldn't see very far in because of Death Alley's angle. Yet as far as they could see, there was no porter or guard in sight, nor anyone at all, not even a watchdog on a chain. The effect was ominous.

Lankhmar - Festival district

240m (720ft)

There is always a minor celebration in progress in this district, especially along Festival Street, which extends into the Park District. On major holidays, the street is choked with people. Vendors crowd the sides, hawking their wares. Street performers in multicolored garb try to entice a few coins from the populace. Of course, no festival would be complete without a full assortment of pickpockets and cutpurses...constant income for the Thieves' Guild.

Lankhmar - Plaza district

240m (720ft)

For there the vendors of drugs and the peddlers of curiosa and the hawkers of assignments light their stalls and crouching places with foxfire, glowworms, and firepots with tiny single windows, and they conduct their business almost as silently as the stars conduct theirs.
